

The Follet pass

Royans-Isère-Coulmes - Rencurel

Rencurel (S.M Booth)

Immerse yourself in the heart of the forest of Coulmes, on the paths formerly frequented by the "Charbonniers" formerly very present on this massif.

To give you a taste of the deep forest of Coulmes, largely composed of beeches. At the foot of the Follet, admire the splendid view of the village of Malleval-en-Vercors and the Isère valley.

Trek

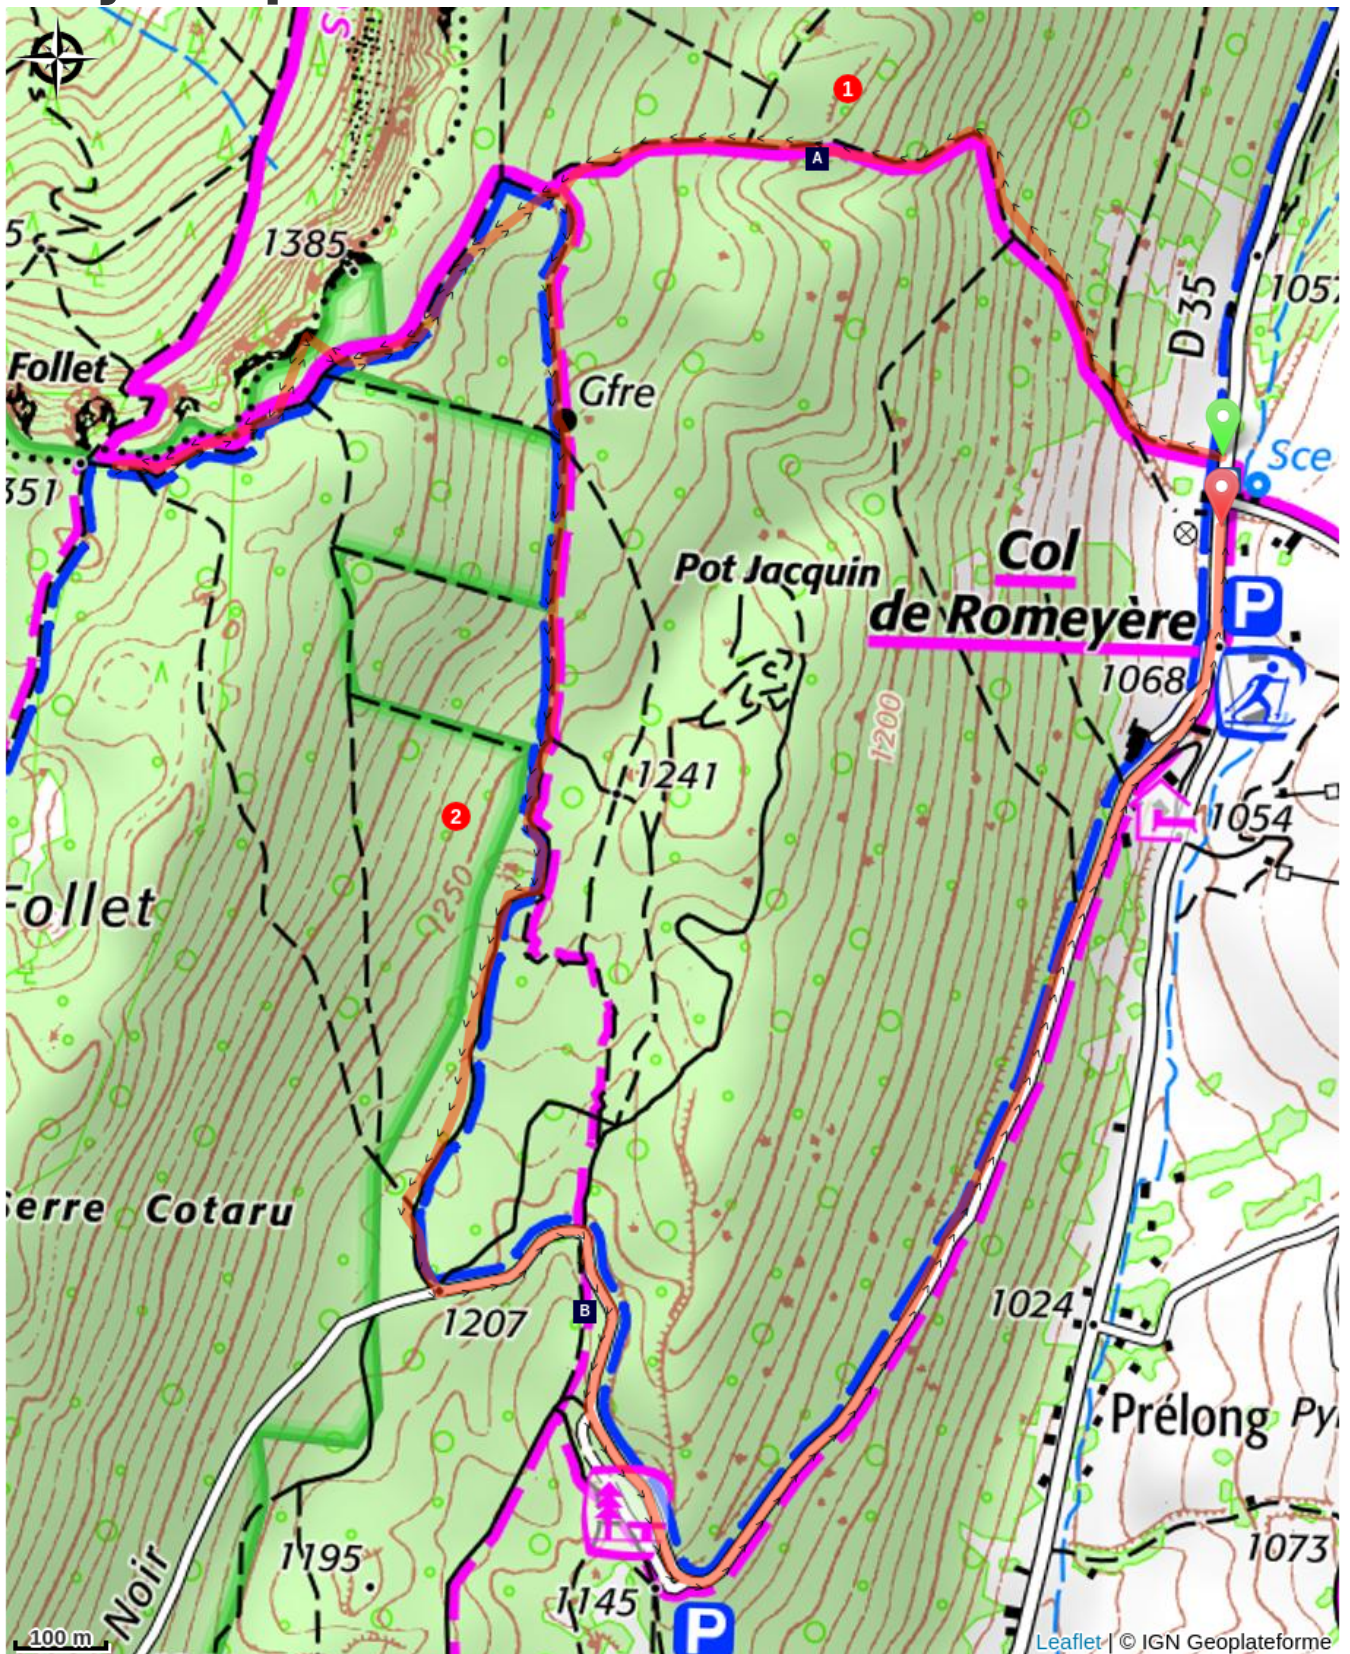

Departure : Col de Romeyère (parking), Rencurel

Arrival : Col de Romeyère (parking), Rencurel

Markings :  PR  GTV à pied

Departure from the Col de Romeyère (car park) take about 150 meters on the road north towards Pas du Follet-Bois de Neurre 2, before turning on the left to climb into a field then into the forest and reach the Bois de Neurre 1. From there, continue until the Pas du Follet, a remarkable view towards the neighboring town of Malleval-en-Vercors and the Isère plain. Consider returning to the Col de Romeyère by retracing your steps to take the Bois de Neurre towards Rencurel, following the yellow-red markings of the Tour des Coulmes. Join the Lapiaz 3 (where we leave the Tour des Coulmes) and then Le Belvédère 4, to finish the walk along the forest road of Mont Noir.

Vallon of Rencurel (A)

During the ascent to the Pas du Follet, admire the view over the Rencurel valley, dominated by the rocks of Méaudre and the Rochers de Gonson. It was here that part of the film was filmed: "Une hironelle a fait le printemps" by Christian Carion in 2001.

Former coalmining (B)

During the last war, lumberjacks and coal miners lived there. During this period, coal miners made charcoal in metal furnaces, while the ancestral method perpetuated by some until the sixties was to carbonize logs of beech, skillfully arranged in grindstones covered with earth, shelter from the air. It took 50 tons of wood to get 10 tons of coal. In 1998, a man revived the past by reviving this charcoal hut.
